Message from The Chairman..... Time: The Most Precious Resource

The passage of time is a concept that requires a great deal of effort trying to wrap around our minds. It is especially problematic because while time itself is a constant, it's perception in our minds is continuously in flux. It's worthwhile, if you're able to, to try and slow time down as much as possible and try to get the most out of each moment. Time itself is far more valuable than money, fame, possessions, etc.– probably the most important real or abstract resource there is. Time is a very strange phenomenon. Time to us is extraordinarily important, and each gives to it one's own significance. To a scientist, time is one thing; to a layman, it is another. To a historian, time is the study of the past; to a man on the stock market, it is the ticker; to a mother, it is the memory of her son; to an exhausted man, it is rest in the shade. Each translates it according to one's needs and satisfaction, shaping it to suit our cunning minds. Yet we cannot do without time. The enrichment, the beauty and significance of that which is timeless, of that which is true, can only be experienced when we understand the whole process of time. After all, we are seeking, each in our own way, a sense of happiness and enrichment. A life that has significance, the riches of true happiness, is not of time. Like love, such a life is timeless; and to understand that which is timeless, we must not approach it through time but rather understand time. We must not utilise time as a means of attaining, realising or apprehending the timeless. But that is what we are doing most of our lives: spending time trying to grasp that which is timeless. So, it is very important to understand time as a whole and not partially. It is interesting to realise that our lives are mostly spent in time, not in the sense of chronological sequence, of minutes, hours, days and years, but also in the sense of psychological memory. Therefore, we should all freely be enjoying our time while also respecting it, and using our time to mold ourselves like clay into an ideal self-image of what we want to be. This should be one of our most treasured goals in life, and we should all be using our time in this manner.
